“ Hey Mommy! Its ALMOST 10 years later. I don't smile anymore. I'm a Georgetown Law graduate now. I haven't done much else since you left. My life began where your ended. I tried to build my own identity but you're so big and you take up so much space that's its hard to create a Sierra outside of you. I don't fully understand who I am anymore. I keep adding titles thinking one of them will give this life some type of meaning and none of them measure up. I am and will always be LilBit's Daughters. By now, my nonprofit, in your honor should be up and running. By now, my heart should be healed so that I can breath without my insides shattering. By now I should be able to listen to Maxwell without the tear ducts of my eyes still practicing reverse engineering - do you know how hard it is to cry and smile at the same time? I thought prayers would get easier, I thought opening in my eyes in the morning would stop feeling like death but without a classroom to sit in it feels like perpetual hell. I've always kinda hated TV so now I sit in my own personal jail cell. I've always been one to go outside, explore and live life. I'm the girl that climbs in her Grandaddy's barn because I belive there are stories to be told. Yes, I'm the tomboy in heels, I don't like football but I scream Cowboys because I'm alot like my Mom but oh so different. You know the game - I know your voice. I'm empty Mommy! Everything I've trust is untrustworthy. Your family, your friends, your husband - smh! That says enough they belong to you not me. I've always stood in the way, overly protective of the only thing of value I see -- My Mom! They never deserved you. I miss you, Mommy! My heart doesn't beat the same, the sparkle in my eyes been long gone. I look at my baby pictures and my eye color is black not brown - there's always been something different about me. So I've convinced myself that you and R. Kelly had 12 Play and I'm the magic that was created, Denzel Washington is my the Uncle that would never touch me, and Halle Berry is my Godmother. At least in that version of the story I get to reside with the GREATS! Even if they have demons they'd never attack a kid and me being Losing Isaiah makes sense! (Insider Joke - remember?) There are things I never got to tell you like how Mr. Langston stole my sparkly T-83, I'm sorry Mommy I should have said something sooner. I know you would have believed me. Also, on your Mazda I hit a mailbox I think, but I def hit the Mailbox with my Mazda and left a note saying it was Dominique. I used a voice app to convince Aunt Ree she got a job at Kmart then paid her to play along, lmao. I'm innocent I could really do no wrong. I was trying to move time along. But, the biggest joke of all Mommy is the New York was boring AF I just loved Jerry that much. I guess every girl wants a Dad and you had FDRS so I had to pick a Dad too. Now that I a grown none of them measured up. But, R.Kelly sung me lullabies that nobody could ever compete with. And, for sure, the Hines way was NEVER my way so my protest was right on time. I have no regrets. I would do anything to see you smile. I purchased limos and if I could I would buy you a jet, fly you to a private a island, kidnap R, Kelly and beg him to sing you a melody that washes every single bad day away. Fear would be nonexistent as you and me danced the nights away. I would be your muse and we would Step In the Name of Love. I would buy you the Chocolate Factory! Did you know thats a real place, Mom? I would make love to you in EVERY single language because that's what a real man is suppose to do. You would own JC Penny and every fashion magazine. I would sacrifice myself so I could build you the man of your dreams. Because what I have learned is that there is no me without you. There's no need for anyone to love me. There's nothing left of me. Just tears and memories. I tried to love. I begged God to heal my fears but the only thing I found to love was EBEC and it ruined me. Love you.
